Q&A With Sarah:

What does a typical workday look like for you?

There is no “typical” workday for me because every day is different! That is one of the things that I love most about my job – the variety of responsibilities and activities that I support, from technical review of assay feasibility and validation data to coordination of sample analysis timelines with clinical study teams and CROs to training junior team members on client processes. This variety appeals to me because it keeps me engaged and on my toes and ensures that there is never a dull moment!

What are you most proud of in your career so far with LabConnect?

I am most proud of the relationships that I have built with my client, specifically with the many PK and ADA scientists who I work directly with. We have developed close working relationships that allow us to tackle challenging projects with success.

Pick one (or more) of LabConnect's values and share a story of how you are carrying them out in your daily work: Partnership, Excellence, Execution, Forward-Thinking, Collaboration, Accountable, Informed, Nimble.

Excellence: I pride myself in providing superior technical project management support to our client. I am currently supporting a particularly challenging piece of a larger clinical trial that has required my strong work ethic, exceptional attention to detail, clear communication skills, and patience. The project is nearing the finish line, and I can truly say that I have given it my all, contributing to its successful outcome.*

Q&A With Sarah:

What would your colleagues say your superpower is at LabConnect?

My colleagues would say that my superpower is my attention to detail. I am extremely detail-oriented and excel at reviewing documents and data and identifying inconsistencies that require correction.

What is one thing on your bucket list?

Traveling through Europe has been on my list of dream vacations for a long time, and my family and I are finally planning a trip to Italy for the summer of 2024. We are so excited to travel throughout the country and see all of the sights that Italy is famous for!
